man has scaled his wife to death."

Philipps, on arriving at McCrane's rooms, found Mrs. McCrane writhing in agony on the floor, surrounded by her neighbors, who were trying to comfort her. McCrane escaped out of the window as the officer stepped into the door. Mrs. McCrane told the officer that her husband came home with a friend and wanted her to cook a good meal for them. McCrane was drunk and when she told him it was rather late at night to cook another meal he started to his feet, seized a can of hot coffee from the stove and dashed its contents directly into her face.

The coffee blinded her and scaled her so badly that her skin peeled off from her face and neck. After the injured woman was removed to the hospital, Phillips went in search of McCrane, and soon had him in custody.

Policeman George Bobel took to the station last aight a coat and waistcoat which he had found on the bank of the Hudson at One Hundred and Sixty-first street.
